A Life Cartoon Comedy.

All the animals are headed for the big county fair. Nibbins is selling admissions and making a fortune. His novel way of admitting folks to choice seats attracts droves. The animals with less money are getting bleacher seats, being flung to their positions.

The attraction which appeals first to the gathered throng is a series of vaudeville and concert acts. A wild duck on a treadmill struts his stuff with the Indian clubs. Then a "strong man" act flops when the heavy weights are shown to be supported by air-filled wings. A queer looking pianist breaks down his piano and is swept off the stage. Some of the bleacherites are attacked by a cop, but manage to get back in again.

The big fight between the giant dog and the little pug bulldog draws the crowd's attention next. The hefty animal has the best of it until his smaller opponent resorts to strategy and wins the battle. Two wild skunks flying over the grounds with their balloon attachments suffer blowouts and drop into the fight arena. This knocks out the winner and scatters the crowd to the four winds.
